presents factors for assessing patients in behavioral emergencies including suicide risk and substance abuse describes the kinds of behavior changes that can pose a danger including their causes and presents methods to calm and provide care to behavioral emergency patients in this volume i describe a model for acquiring skill and attaining competence in evaluating and managing behavioral emergencies the model involves having a knowledge base as described in the book by kleespies 2009 but beyond that it requires considerably more thus it involves learning a decision making strategy that is suited to intense high pressure time limited conditions such as those that can occur when patients may be at imminent risk of life threatening behavior it involves a graduated type of stress training set or stress exposure training that enables the clinician in training to avoid becoming overwhelmed and allows him or her to gain key emergency related experiences these experiences prime the clinician to be able to quickly size up future crises and emergencies and respond to them more rapidly and effectively the graduated approach to training further allows the clinician to begin to see these high pressure situations as challenges that can be managed rather than as anxiety provoking situations that seem beyond his or her capability as noted in various places in this volume behavioral emergencies force clinicians to confront what can be life and death decisions if there is a negative outcome serious clinical ethical legal and professional questions can be raised about the management of the case as pointed out there have been numerous calls to action to improve the training of mental health clinicians in suicide risk assessment and intervention these calls have largely gone unheeded schmitz et al 2012 there is little reason to think that training in the evaluation and management of potential patient violence is appreciably better in this vein is it not time for professional psychology to embrace training and competence in such a critical area of practice as the assessment and management of patient life threatening behaviors book psycinfo database record c 2014 apa all rights reserved
